

HALO Current Account Terms and Conditions

Generated for HALO demo source retrieval.

Prototype note: HALO is fictional demo content modelled on the structure of UK digital current-account terms, fee information, support articles, and deposit-protection disclosures.

These terms and using your HALO account

These terms apply to the HALO Everyday Current Account. The account is for personal use only and must not be used for business purposes. The customer must be at least 18, a UK resident, and able to complete identity and eligibility checks before the account can be opened.

The customer agrees to these terms by opening the account, using the HALO app, using a HALO card, making or receiving payments, or keeping money with HALO. HALO may refuse an application, pause onboarding, or ask for more information where identity, fraud, sanctions, credit, or regulatory checks require it.

How to contact HALO

Customers can contact HALO through in-app chat, by email at support@halo.example, or by phone on 0800 000 4821 from the UK. HALO can contact customers through the app, push notification, email, phone, SMS, or post. The customer must keep their phone number, email address, and home address up to date.

HALO sends statements, notices, payment alerts, and changes to terms in English. Monthly statements are available in the app. Customers can download statements and transaction history at any time while the account remains open.

Keeping the account and app secure

The customer must keep their phone, HALO app, password, passcode, PIN, card details, and security credentials safe. The customer must not share their app login, PIN, one-time codes, card number, CVC, or remote access to their device with anyone.

HALO will never ask for the customer's full card number, CVC, app passcode, or PIN in chat, email, or by phone. If the customer thinks someone else knows their details, they should freeze the card, change their passcode, and contact HALO immediately.

The customer is responsible for checking transactions regularly and telling HALO as soon as possible about unauthorised transactions, errors, lost devices, lost cards, suspicious calls, scams, or security concerns.

Available balance, Pots, and overdrafts

The main available balance is the amount used to decide whether payments can go through. Money in Pots and savings spaces belongs to the customer but is not part of the main available balance until moved back.

HALO may reject a payment if the main available balance is too low, even if money is held in a Pot. Offline card payments, delayed merchant collections, chargeback reversals, fees, or corrections can still take the account below zero. Any unarranged negative balance is due immediately.

HALO does not offer an arranged overdraft in this prototype account. If an overdraft product is added later, separate overdraft terms, rates, eligibility checks, and repayment information will apply.

Payments and payment instructions

The customer can make bank transfers, standing orders, Direct Debits, card payments, cash withdrawals, international payments, and internal transfers where those features are available in the app.

To send a UK bank transfer, HALO may need the recipient name, sort code, account number, account type, amount, reference, and payment date. The customer approves payments using the app passcode, PIN, security code, fingerprint, face recognition, or another security method.

Once a customer has approved an immediate payment, it usually cannot be cancelled. Future-dated payments and standing orders can be cancelled in the app before the cut-off shown. Direct Debits must normally be cancelled at least 2 working days before the due date.

HALO may refuse, delay, reverse, or block a payment where instructions are unclear, the payment exceeds limits, there is not enough available balance, fraud or scam risk is suspected, the account is restricted, or legal, sanctions, regulatory, or partner-bank rules require it.

International payments and foreign currency

International payments may require recipient bank details such as an IBAN, BIC, routing number, address, account type, currency, and payment purpose. The exact information depends on destination and currency.

International payments show the exchange rate, estimated arrival time, fixed fee, variable fee, and any partner charges before confirmation. After approval, international payments normally cannot be cancelled, though HALO may try to recall a payment where possible.

Card spending in a foreign currency uses the card scheme exchange rate unless otherwise shown. HALO does not add a card purchase fee in this prototype. ATM operators, foreign banks, or intermediary banks may charge their own fees.

Fees, interest, and charges

The Everyday Current Account has no monthly fee. UK bank transfers, incoming GBP payments, card purchases, statements, and app notifications are free. Specific services, such as lost-card replacement, express card delivery, international payments, or specialist document requests, may carry a fee shown before the customer confirms.

HALO does not pay interest on the Everyday Current Account balance in this prototype. Separate savings products may pay interest and have their own terms.

HALO may take fees, refunds owed back to HALO, unpaid debts, chargeback reversals, or mistaken credits from the account balance, Pots, or savings spaces where permitted by law and these terms.

Cards and card controls

The HALO card can be used anywhere the card network is accepted, subject to account status, card controls, merchant acceptance, security checks, available balance, and payment limits.

Customers can freeze and unfreeze the card, view card details, reveal or reset the PIN, block gambling merchants, block cash withdrawals, and order a replacement card in the app where available.

Freezing a card stops most new card payments but may not stop some offline payments, recurring payments, transport charges, delayed merchant collections, hotel or hire deposits, or card payments already authorised.

Refunds, disputes, scams, and unauthorised payments

If a customer reports an unauthorised payment, HALO will investigate and usually refund the payment unless the customer acted fraudulently, intentionally failed to keep security details safe, or was grossly negligent.

For merchant disputes, customers should usually contact the merchant first unless fraud is suspected. HALO may request receipts, cancellation proof, delivery records, merchant messages, police references, or other evidence before raising a chargeback.

Customers should report payment errors and unauthorised transactions as soon as possible. If the customer waits more than 13 months after the payment date, HALO may not be able to refund or recover the money.

Account restrictions and account closure

HALO may suspend, freeze, restrict, or close an account if required by law, if fraud or criminal activity is suspected, if the customer breaches these terms, if identity checks fail, if the customer behaves abusively, or if keeping the account open would create unacceptable risk.

The customer can ask to close the account in the app. Before closure, the customer must repay any money owed and move out any remaining balance. HALO may keep records after closure where required for legal, regulatory, tax, fraud-prevention, complaint-handling, or audit reasons.

Changes to these terms

HALO may change these terms, features, fees, limits, interest information, or contact details. HALO will give reasonable notice for changes that are not favourable to customers, unless the change is required sooner for legal, regulatory, security, or operational reasons.

If the customer does not agree to a change, they can close the account before the change takes effect. Continuing to use the account after the change date means the customer accepts the new terms.

Complaints

If something goes wrong, the customer can complain through in-app chat, email, phone, or post. HALO will acknowledge the complaint, investigate fairly, and send a final response within the timescales required by UK complaint-handling rules.

If the customer is unhappy with HALO's final response, or HALO does not respond in time, the customer may be able to refer the complaint to the Financial Ombudsman Service.

Deposit protection

Eligible deposits are protected by the UK Financial Services Compensation Scheme up to the applicable statutory limit per eligible depositor, subject to FSCS rules. Protection depends on the authorised bank or deposit-taker holding the money and the customer's eligibility.